The Rosslyn Chapel Way – QuietRoute

Rosslyn Chapel is steeped in history dating back to 1446. Its exquisite stone carvings and windows, alongside its recent fame from Dan Brown's book 'The Da Vinci Code', make the chapel a very interesting visit. New signed and lit paths from Edinburgh's South Eastern areas provide an excellent way to reach the chapel away from busy traffic.

Route improvements:

- New surfaced path from Gilmerton to Loanhead (linking on to Roslin via quiet roads)
- Full route signage with decorative finials.

QuietRoutes

The Council is developing a network of QuietRoutes, which are routes for everyone, on paths and low traffic roads. When completed they will provide convenient and high quality routes where users of all abilities can be confident of getting to where they want to go. Perfect for commuting in comfort and for trips out exploring Edinburgh.

Each route has a number and colour to help identify them on maps and signs. When complete, every route will have blue signs that indicate the route's number, colour, destinations and distances to help you find your way (see photo above right).

The Innocent Railway path, Craigmillar Castle Park

From the Meadows you can follow the Innocent Railway path under Holyrood Park to link with paths and quiet roads to reach Craigmillar Castle Park. This parkland is criss-crossed by rough trails through woodland with great views across the city. Its hill top is crowned by the medieval Craigmillar Castle that is open to the public.

Recent route improvements:

Upgraded path and removed steps from Craigmillar Castle Park to the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh.
